Statement of Faculty Senate Action:

APC Document 99:

Delete INTS 325, 345, 350

Effective Date: Fall 2012

1. Delete: On pages 182-183, the course entries for INTS 325, 345, 350:

325 Indigenous Rights and Social Justice (3)

Examines contemporary global movements that protect and promote indigenous peoples' political, social or cultural rights. Such initiatives include the preservation of indigenous knowledge, community management of natural resources, and safeguards against international development schemes. Fall.

345 Negotiating Peace: The Practice of Local and Global Peacebuilding (3)

Explores the causes and complexities of contemporary conflict, examining methods that respond to conflict without perpetuating cycles of revenge, hostility, and division. Participants learn through practical, hands-on experience how to identify common bonds and bridge perceptual differences. Reflecting on forgiveness and reconciliation in their own communities, students examine worldwide endeavors in the field of conflict transformation that heal the wounds of entrenched division and war. Spring.

350 Refugees, Gender and Human Rights (3)

Examines the connection between involuntary displacement, gender and human rights law. Students examine the causes and contexts for population displacement, both internal and cross-boundary. These contexts include racism, sexism, xenophobia, changing political regimes, and war/conflict. Spring.

2. Delete: On page 181, in the list of Electives for International Studies Concentration:

INTS 325 Indigenous Rights and Social Justice (3)

INTS 345 Negotiating Peace: The Practice of Local and Global Peacebuilding (3)

INTS 350 Refugees, Gender and Human Rights (3)

Impact:

There will be no added faculty resources needed for this change. The changes are updates to the catalog courses in the INTS concentration.

Rationale:

These courses were introduced and taught by the former director of International Studies, who has since left the university. These changes are routine updating of catalog courses in the INTS concentration.
